Blondes

Do blondes really have more fun?
Do gentlemen really prefer them?

It's a question that has fueled debate among men and women—and ignited the indignation of brunettes and redheads—for years. Flaxen-haired women—from the platinum sirens of yesteryear, Marilyn, Jayne and, yes, even Barbie—to today's blonde bombshells, Pamela Anderson, Jenny McCarthy and Britney Spears—have been immortalized, idolized and idealized for decades. They've been the subjects and stars of countless movies (Marilyn Monroe's 1953 break-through role in Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, and more recently, Reese Witherspoon's portrayal of a dippy sorority girl turned Harvard law student in Legally Blonde), they've been dissected in books, they've been featured on the covers of hundreds of magazines and they've been the source of inspiration for scores of songs and music videos. On the following pages we pay tribute to every shade, color and hue of Playboy's own golden goddesses.

Brunettes

If blondes have more fun,
why is it that gentlemen
marry brunettes?

A 1955 film by that title, starring buxom beauty Jane Russell, attempted to counter blondemia by giving beautiful brunettes their day in the sun. Do men marry them because so many blondes were actually born brunettes? Is it simply because brunettes comprise 60 percent of the population? Or is it because they come in such a delicious variety of color combinations—chestnut, brown sugar, mahogany and acorn? Whatever the case, we're partial to raven-haired babes, too. We're sure you'll find a favorite flavor among this batch of Playboy's finest brunettes.

Redheads

For centuries it was believed that red hair was an omen of bad luck.

Fortunately, Elizabeth I dispelled that myth and brought honor and popularity to those lovely ladies blessed with fair skin and flaming red locks.

In fact, shades of red—from copper to auburn to strawberry blonde—are the most requested colors in beauty salons today. You'll find hues of crimson everywhere, from cartoon characters like Ariel in The Little Mermaid and Wilma Flintstone to popular actresses and entertainers such as Julia Roberts, Nicole Kidman and Tori Amos. Books (The Red-head Encyclopedia) and Websites (www.redheads.net) are dedicated to all things red, and being a carrot top is commonly regarded as a sign of confidence, spunk and zest. We've assembled a stunning collection of racy redheads to demonstrate just how hot red can be.
